ABSTRACT

Technical elements, their technical relationships and technical characteristics for the elements can be preset using a computer-aided configuration tool. The elements and their relationships classify a technical system. Characteristics for an element may be preset only if, in consequence, it remains compatible with another element to which it is intended to be related. Alternatively, the characteristics of the elements and a relationship which exists between them are used to check whether they are compatible with one another.